

Friday, September 24th, 2010:

1: MS Nordnorge from Bergen at 22.30:

”Stand-up scientists” are this evening giving talks all over Europe at a variety of public places as a part of the EU initiative Researchers' Night. Eleven scientists are on board all coastal steamer ships now cruise the Norwegian coast. On this ship lecturer in journalism Andreas Ytterstad from Oslo University College, will give a talk about climate change and the media.

2: MS Nordkapp from Molde at 18.30:

”Stand-up scientists” are this evening giving talks all over Europe at a variety of public places as a part of the EU initiative Researchers' Night. Eleven scientists are on board all coastal steamer ships now cruise the Norwegian coast. On this ship geologist, PhD Astrid Lyså from Geological Survey of Norway will give the talk Climate and Environmental Changes, some natural and some human.

3: MS Vesterålen from Trondheim at 12.00.

”Stand-up scientists” are this evening giving talks all over Europe at a variety of public places as a part of the EU initiative Researchers' Night. Eleven scientists are on board all coastal steamer ships now cruise the Norwegian coast. On this ship geologist, PhD Eiliv Larsen from Geological Survey of Norway will give the talk Climate and Environmental Changes, some natural and some human.

4: MS Midnatsol from Bodø at 15.00.

”Stand-up scientists” are this evening giving talks all over Europe at a variety of public places as a part of the EU initiative Researchers' Night. Eleven scientists are on board all coastal steamer ships now cruise the Norwegian coast. On this ship geologist and post.doc. Aurelien van Welden from Geological Survey of Norway will give a talk about climate changes, natural and human.

5: MS Lofoten from Tromsø at 18.30.

”Stand-up scientists” are this evening giving talks all over Europe at a variety of public places as a part of the EU initiative Researchers' Night. Eleven scientists are on board all coastal steamer ships now cruise the Norwegian coast. On this ship geologist, PhD Dorte K. Kristensen from Norwegian Polar Institute will give a talk about climate changes, natural and human.

6: MS Kong Harald from Honningsvåg at 15.15.

”Stand-up scientists” are this evening giving talks all over Europe at a variety of public places as a part of the EU initiative Researchers' Night. Eleven scientists are on board all coastal steamer ships now cruise the Norwegian coast. On this ship geologist and PhD-student Simon Pind Jessen from University of Tromsø, will give a talk about climate changes, natural and human.

7: MS Trollfjord from Kirkenes at 12.45.

”Stand-up scientists” are this evening giving talks all over Europe at a variety of public places as a part of the EU initiative Researchers' Night. Eleven scientists are on board all coastal steamer ships now cruise the Norwegian coast. On this ship archeologist and PhD-student Jan Ingolf Kleppe from University of Tromsø, will give a talk about climate changes and human adaptation.

8: MS Nordstjernen from Hammerfest at 12.45.

”Stand-up scientists” are this evening giving talks all over Europe at a variety of public places as a part of the EU initiative Researchers' Night. Eleven scientists are on board all coastal steamer ships now cruise the Norwegian coast. On this ship geologist and PhD-student Katarzyna Zamelczyk from University of Tromsø, will give a talk about climate changes, natural and human.

9: MS Richard With from Svolvær at 20.00.

”Stand-up scientists” are this evening giving talks all over Europe at a variety of public places as a part of the EU initiative Researchers' Night. Eleven scientists are on board all coastal steamer ships now cruise the Norwegian coast. On this ship geologist, associate professor Mona Henriksen from Norwegian University of Life Sciences will give a talk about climate changes, natural and human.

10: MS Nordlys from Brønnøysund at 17.00.

”Stand-up scientists” are this evening giving talks all over Europe at a variety of public places as a part of the EU initiative Researchers' Night. Eleven scientists are on board all coastal steamer ships now cruise the Norwegian coast. On this ship geographer and PhD Lena Rubensdotter from Geological Survey of Norway will give a talk about climate changes, natural and human.

11: MS Polarlys from Kristiansund at 17.00.

”Stand-up scientists” are this evening giving talks all over Europe at a variety of public places as a part of the EU initiative Researchers' Night. Eleven scientists are on board all coastal steamer ships now cruise the Norwegian coast. On this ship geologist and professor Jon Landvik from Norwegian University of Life Sciences will give a talk about climate changes, natural and human.